Biography
Nathan Sites was born on November 6, 1830 in Bellville, Ohio to Robert and Sarah Sites. He graduated from Ohio Wesleyan University in 1859, and the next year became a missionary under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Sarah Moore on March 6, 1861 and they left for China in June of that year.

Sites worked as a missionary in Fuzhou, Fujian province for the rest of his life, joining the movement for a stronger, Chinese-led church and ordaining some of the earliest Chinese protestant ministers. In 1895 he contracted a fever after an active day of preaching and baptizing, and died some days later on February 10. He was buried in the Mission Cemetery in Fuzhou, and a hospital was named in his honor.

His journals were compiled into a biography by his wife, and published as Nathan Sites: An Epic of the East in 1912.

Collection Scope and Content Note
The collection consists of journals and clippings, which Sites collected while in China. The bulk of the material covers his early years in China. This was a foundational period among Protestant missions in China because they were given new access to mission fields, and important mission organizations such as the China Inland Mission were being founded. The fact that Sites supported the indigenization of the church in China during this early period is significant, as this movement only gained widespread support among missionaries decades later.

The manuscript journals describe his life in Fuzhou as well as trips through the surrounding countryside. Many of the clippings collected in the scrapbook are from articles and published letters written by Sites’ wife, Sarah Moore Sites. Others deal with aspects of Chinese culture or Christian religious life.
Processing
Metal clips and staples were removed from materials and folded items were flattened. Materials were placed in new acid-free folders and boxes. In 2014, the collection and finding aid were updated as part of the Henry Luce Foundation grant.
